THE BEYONDERS TRY THEIR (SCARY, EXTRA-DIMENSIONAL) HAND AT MARKETING:

- We are Beyond. Dreamers. Destroyers. All of reality our whim. And frankly… we get bored.
- These tales from across the multifarious domains of Battleworld – not of heroism or consequence, but of humor – provide a brief respite from millennia of omnipotence.
- We cannot be comprehended by the miniscule human mind. Turn your attention to this book instead of trying.
- You are welcome.

"I knew your grandfather, Hill. Did you know that?"

She said nothing.

"His unit suffered eighty percent losses in the Bulge. They retreated into the English Channel, cut off, no supplies. The weather was brutal, huge storms, blinding snowfalls, sub-zero temperatures. One man bled out, another died stopping a Panzer division from crossing the river.

"Corporal Frances Barrows kept his last buddy alive. When we found them, they were half-starved and suffering from severe exposure. But he'd held his bridge against the Germans, and saved at least one man's life."

Hill just stared at him.

"Did he ever tell you that story, Director Hill?"

"A dozen times."

"He was one of many true heroes I met in that war." Slowly, Cap turned and addressed the circle of S.H.I.E.L.D. agents. "Put your weapons down, boys."

"Captain America," Hill said slowly, "you're in command here."

She stepped forward, her teeth gritted in rage.

"Their war," she hissed. "Not mine."

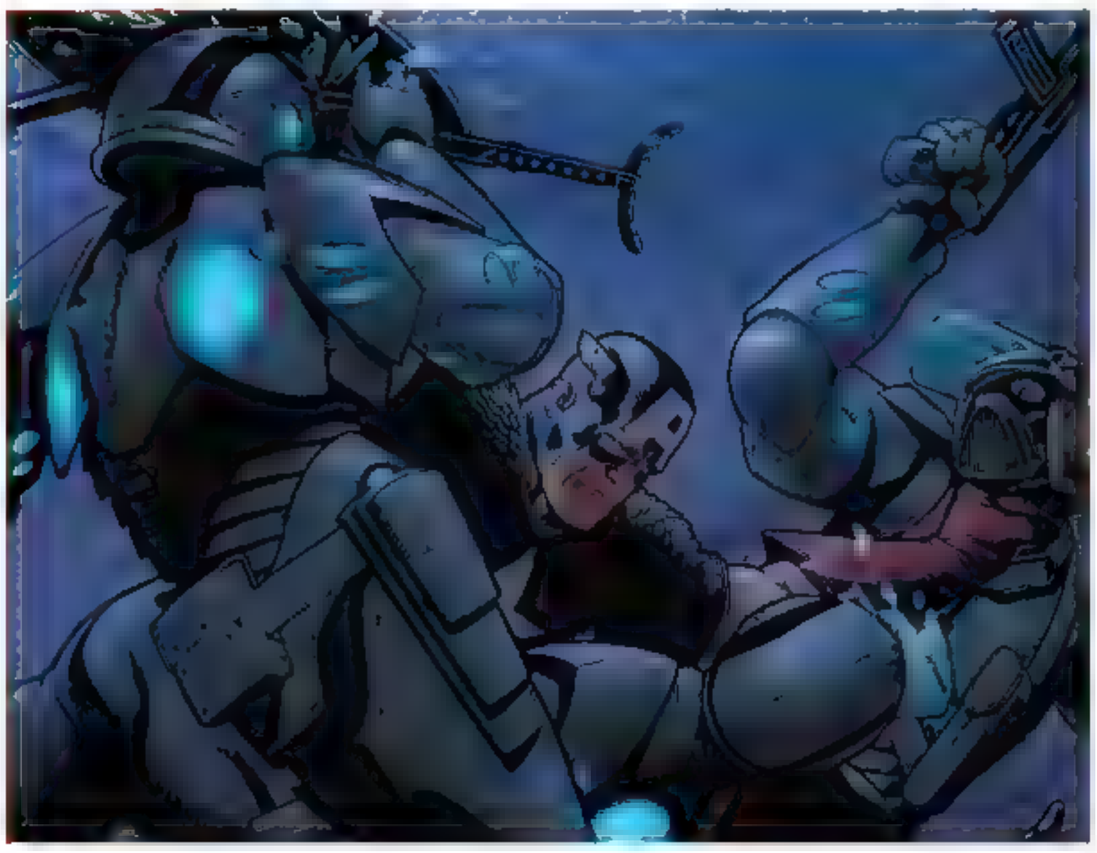
"Weapons Down," Cap repeated. "Or I will not be responsible for what comes next."

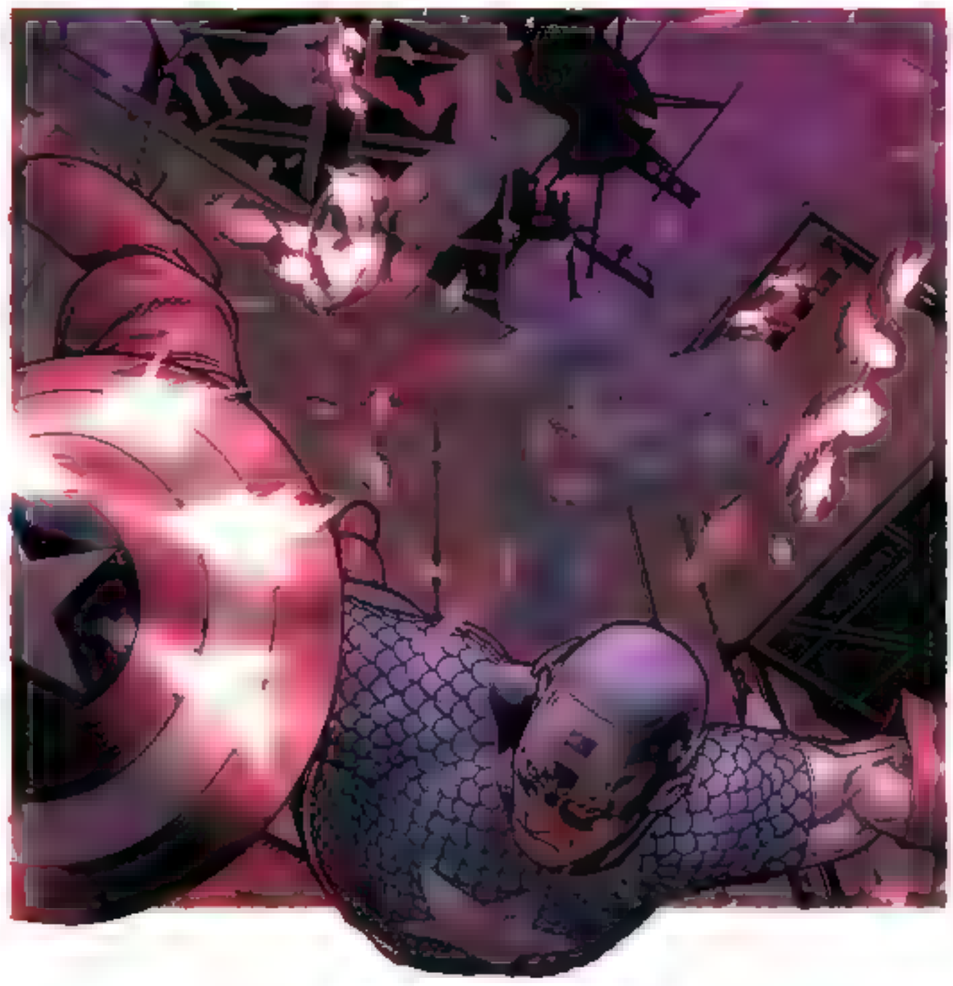
"Tranquilizers on. Get ready."

"This is insane, Hill!"

"There's an easy solution."

"Damn you for this."





"Keep flying, son. And watch that potty mouth."

The pilot nodded tranquilly, pulled up on the stick. The flight deck grew closer, faster and faster, then seemed to flatten out as the plane leveled off, less than twenty feet above the deck. The pilot kicked in the afterburners, and the plane began to rise.

Cap staggered, almost toppled off. He held on, grinding his teeth.

S.H.I.E.L.D. agents ran out onto the flight deck: two dozen, maybe three. They pointed upward, started squeezing off shots.

But Cap's plane was moving too fast. The pilot nosed it up farther, pulling up and away from the carrier. The flight deck slid past, a blur, and then they were out over open air.

Cap glanced backward. The Helicarrier was shrinking into the distance, its jagged bulk framed against the clouds. No doubt Hill was already scrambling pursuit planes, but he knew they'd be too late.

Cap straddled himself atop the cracked cockpit, riding the plane like a surfer. He looked down as the clouds parted, revealing the spires of Manhattan, the ocean and rivers surrounding it. The sea to the east, the mountains and farms and towns to the west.

"Whu-whu, where are we going?" the pilot yelled.

Cap leaned forward, into the wind.

"America," he said.
